

echosound location

More than 17 million people have heard this – have you?

The BBC are currently using sunshine to promote the new series of “Two Thousand Acres Of Sky”, starring Michelle Collins, on BBC ONE.

echo sound location (esl) comprises members of atomic echo, a collective whose backgrounds are as diverse as the music, and include broadcasting, design and scientific research. They've been working together on esl for over 18 months, and have amassed a collection of over 20 songs, which are ready to be unveiled. echo sound locator 1 features the first four of these: sunshine, blowtorch, plateau and the eiger. Much of the remaining material has already been mastered and is ready for release.

esl distils those near perfect moments when everything makes sense, for an instant, before the doubts set in. Songs about the moment you first heard your favourite record (blowtorch), to the second when you thought you were truly in love (sunshine), the joys of cycling to work (plateau).

Hubs is the technical wizard and former DJ with a penguin obsession who links together the fragments. He's known he wanted to make music since he made cups of tea for Cathy Dennis, in a studio in Chiswick, while she recorded a Coke ad. Since then he's produced music for TV and radio. By day he's a studio manager for the BBC World Service.

St Budeaux is the one who comes up with the ideas. He's spent time working as an online producer for the likes of Blur and Radiohead, and developing an unhealthy obsession for Atomic Kitten. He brings the guitars and the nonsensical to Hubs, who then filters them into something more coherent. He is named after a glamorous Plymouth suburb.

Millie Molina was the last to join, but is the key to the finished sound. With years of experience as a classical musician playing in a number of orchestras, her voice has been likened to Dido, Sarah Cracknell of St Etienne and Hope Sandoval of Mazzy Star. She's currently on her way to becoming Dr Molina, as she works on her PhD.

Don Ramon is the wandering spirit of the group, a mystical mariachi, about whom very little is known.

If you are interested in finding out more about esl, then you can contact them in the following ways:

Tel: Alex on 07710 778919

Email: esl@atomicecho.com

Post: echo sound location, 113 Barons Keep, Gliddon Road, London, W14 9AX

Website: www.atomicecho.com/esl/